WAR GAS IS USED NO MORE IN FIGHTING

In France and Belgium and That Battle Weapon is Almost Forgotten.

(Correspondence of Associated Press.)

PARIS, Feb. 11.—Very little is heard now of the effects of suffocating gas at the front, though the official communique frequently mentions attacks in which it has been used. The report some months ago, that 5,000 French soldiers succumbed to it in the Argonne through neglect to distribute protecting masks, seems to have been forgotten and in the absence of other reported casualties anxiety seems to have disappeared. Abbe Moreaux, director of the Bourges observatory, explains why the Germans are, at a great disadvantage on account of the winds, and how the Allies could dominate them in that kind of warfare if they saw fit.

"The battlefront, excepting between Novon and Verdun, runs in a generally northerly-southerly direction, the rest of it east and west, while the north of France and Belgium are all the year round subjected to general Atlantic winds; that is to say, winds varying between west and southwest," he says. "My calculations, based on the central meteorological bureau statistics, show that only twenty-eight times in 100 during the entire winter on an average has the wind blown from the east, southeast or northeast; consequently in the winter season a German gas attack has only twenty-eight chances in a hundred of success, while an attack by the Allies with the same arm has seventy-two chances in a hundred on the fronts running from north to south. On the front running from east to west the conditions are less favorable to the Allies, the north winds being in the ratio of thirty in 100 in winter and forty in 100 in summer."

DECISION

By Judge Keller Conflicts with other Federal Judges in Similar Cases.

CHARLESTON, Feb. 10.—Judge B. F. Keller, of the United States district court has rendered an opinion in which he holds that when a damage suit between two non-resident corporations is filed in the state court in the state where both corporations have their principal place of business, the cause cannot be remanded to a United States district court of another state for trial.

The opinion in the case of the New York Coal Company against the Sunday Creek Coal Company and the Continental Coal Company, which was filed in the common pleas court of Franklin county, O. On petition of the Continental company the suit was transferred to the federal court here. The plaintiff then filed a petition to take the cause back to the court in which it originated and the petition was granted. It is said that this opinion conflicts with those of other federal court here.
